SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE
CHAIR / SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE

Situated in the upstate region of South Carolina mid-way between Atlanta, GA, and Charlotte, NC, the School of Architecture at Clemson University is a professional design program garnering prominence through numerous national and international awards to its faculty and students. The School of Architecture’s recent achievements support the aspirations of Clemson University to become a top-20 public university by 2010, a goal set by University President and architect James F. Barker, FAIA.

The School of Architecture is seeking applications and nominations for the Chair’s position with duties beginning in August 2006. The ideal candidate should possess architectural registration and a professional degree or Ph.D. in architecture as well as a combination of the following: a distinguished record of nationally or internationally recognized work in scholarship, practice and/or teaching. Qualified candidates must demonstrate strong academic leadership, including program stewardship and support of faculty and student development, excellent interpersonal communication skills and the ability to establish and maintain the confidence and respect of faculty, students, staff, alumni and the professional community.

The School of Architecture’s vision is to advance its national status by promoting design and academic research, while preparing students for diverse roles in architecture through interdisciplinary collaboration and by embracing the philosophy of a fluid campus, where students and faculty work in a variety of diverse physical, political and cultural settings. Four centers, which currently makeup the fluid campus, support an exchange of architectural ideas that stem from engaging and understanding place. Our centers in Charleston, SC; Genoa, Italy; Barcelona, Spain; and Clemson, SC, each offer distinct pedagogical initiatives and research possibilities and allow for participation in global and local design agendas.

The School of Architecture is uniquely situated within the College of Architecture, Arts and Humanities, offering a diverse environment for creative initiatives and interdisciplinary collaborations. The School of Design and Building, within which the School of Architecture resides, also offers undergraduate and graduate degrees in city and regional planning, landscape architecture, construction science and management, historic preservation and real estate development. The cross-disciplinary nature of the College enriches the undergraduate and graduate programs and is the basis for the new Ph.D. in Environmental Design and Planning. The School also works in collaboration with the Clemson University Restoration Institute, a multi-disciplinary research entity specializing in the restoration of historic, ecological and human-made infrastructure. The Richard A. McMahan Fund for Excellence, one of the largest endowments to a school of architecture in the country, generously supports and bolsters the School’s vision.

Applications and nominations will be accepted until the position is filled. Applications received by November 14, 2005, will be assured full consideration. Applicants should submit a letter of intent, curriculum vitae and the names and contact information of three references to:
