Clemson University invites applications for the position of Associate/Full Professor for the School of Nursing.

Clemson University is a selective public land grant university located in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains in South Carolina. The University is committed to world-class teaching, research and public service. Over 16,000 students select from undergraduate and graduate degree programs in more than 70 fields of study offered by five colleges. Clemson, classified by the Carnegie Foundation as a Doctoral/Research University-Extensive, was Time magazine’s Public College of the Year in 2001, and ranked by Kiplinger’s as 20th among top public universities.

The School of Nursing is nationally accredited. The College of Health, Education and Human Development includes nationally acclaimed Joseph F. Sullivan Nursing and Wellness Center. The position reports to the Director, who is responsible for the leadership of 26 full-time faculty in the development of innovative academic programs. There are 400 students in the generic baccalaureate, RN-BS nursing programs, and over 100 students in four master’s options—nurse practitioner, clinical nurse specialist, nursing administration, and nursing education.

The School of Nursing has recently received funding for a collaborative doctoral program with Genetics. The initiative is funded by a consortium with four area hospitals, the area technical college, and a private foundation. Candidate will have an opportunity to spearhead a doctoral initiative. This position will be supported by a research assistant. The successful candidate will have an earned doctorate in nursing or related field, a master’s degree in nursing, a record of successful teaching experience in higher education, a scholarly program of funded research commensurate with the appointment, and be eligible for RN licensure in South Carolina. Salary and rank are commensurate with qualifications and experience. The position is available January 15, 2006

The position is available January 15, 2006, and applications received by November 15, 2005, will receive full consideration. Review of applications will continue until the position is filled.
